INTRODUCTION

During the last 10 years measurement of health care institutions performance has been increasingly used both on clinical, organisational and national levels. The original clinical rationale – quality improvement is still important but the use of performance measures for organisational accountability and regulation has been increasingly popular and coupled to interventions as publication of league tables and pay for performance. The present workshop aims at an overview over modern performance measurement and a critical discussion of the success of the intended effects.

The ESQH Annual Workshop, 2013 is hosted by the Croatian Society for Quality Improvement in HealthCare, Croatian Medical Association. It commences at 12.30 on Thursday 23 May and finishes at 12.30 on Friday 24. The language of the Workshop is English.
